Can I use my card at restaurants, hotels and car rental agencies?

Yes, but keep in mind many service-oriented merchants automatically factor in an additional percentage to cover any gratuity you may leave or incidental charge you may incur. When using your card at restaurants, it's best to have an available balance that is 20 percent greater than your bill, and when using your card at hotels and car rental agencies, check with the merchant to find out how much, if any, they over-authorize their transactions.

Can I use my card to pay at the pump at gas stations?

Yes, however, an authorization of at least $75-$150 may be held on your account. This authorization may not be removed from your account for several days. To avoid this over-authorization, simply pay for your gas inside the service station.

Can I still make a purchase if I don't have enough funds on my card?

Yes, it's possible, but only if the merchant allows split-tender transactions. A split-tender transaction is when the payment is split across multiple methods. Depending on the merchant's policy, you can request a split-tender transaction – just use an additional card or alternative payment method to cover the remaining cost of the purchase beyond your card's balance. Keep in mind, some merchants may only allow you to do this if the second method of payment is cash or check. Also, online and most mail-order merchants do not permit split-tender transaction. There is no guarantee that every merchant will accept two forms of payment.

What if my card is declined at the point of sale?

When making a purchase in-person, the merchant may have attempted to process the purchase for a greater amount than what is available on the card. If this happens, ask the merchant to split the payment across multiple methods. You can only spend what is loaded on your card – any amounts beyond that will cause a decline. For additional help, you can contact customer service at the number on the back of your card.
